

BIO

Alexis Wichowski, PhD, works in, writes about, and teaches on government, technology, and media. She serves as Deputy Chief Technology Officer for Innovation for the City of New York, and previously served as Acting Deputy Chief Technology Officer for Broadband (2020-2021) and Acting Director of Communications for the NYC CTO (2020-2022). She also holds an appointment as adjunct associate professor in Columbia University's School of International and Public Affairs, where she's taught since 2011.

Prior work serving New York City include Associate Commissioner at the newly established Department of Veterans' Services and Disaster Relief Field Responder before and during 9/11. Other government work includes Program Officer for the US Department of State's Office of eDiplomacy, Diplomatic Innovation Division under then-Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, and Director of Media Analysis Strategy at the Permanent Mission of the United States to the United Nations. Outside government, Wichowski has worked in media impact research, indexing, coding, theater production, foreign sitcoms, and pretzel vending.

Wichowski regularly researches and writes about media, technology, and government, with publications in The Washington Post, WIRED, Foreign Affairs, The Atlantic, TechCrunch, GovExec, The Hill, among others, as well as the critically acclaimed book, The Information Trade: How Big Tech Conquers Countries, Challenges Our Rights, and Transforms Our World (HarperCollins). Current teaching includes the courses Tech & Tactics for Innovative Policymaking (winner of SIPA's "Top 5 Course Award," selected by students out of over 200 courses) and Technology, National Security & The Citizen. She's also served as faculty advisor for capstone courses studying technological authoritarianism in China for the US Congress and digital transformation for the government of Aruba.

Wichowski's work has been recognized through the Presidential Management Fellowship, two Meritorious Honor Awards, a Distinguished Dissertation Award, a student-nominated teaching award, and a Fulbright. She holds a PhD in Information Science from the University at Albany's College of Engineering and Applied Sciences and a BA in Chinese from Connecticut College, completed in three years cum laude. She lives in Brooklyn with her family and reads science fiction voraciously. Additional details about her work can be found at awichowski.com.